Tanjung Puteri (1st Link)

Johor-Singapore Causeway is a 1056-metre causeway that links the city of Johor Bahru in Malaysia across the Straits of Johor to the town of Woodlands in Singapore. It serves as a road and rail link, as well as water piping into Singapore. Malaysia's strategic location between Thailand and Singapore, competitive prices and excellent transport infrastructure make it an ideal transit point.

Tanjung Kupang (2nd Link)

The 2nd link is a 1,920-metre bridge officially opened to traffic in 1998 as a means to reduce traffic on the Causeway. Travelling along the 2nd link usually takes less time than the Causeway due to smoother traffic in both directions, however, during festive periods (especially Chinese New Year, Hari Raya, Christmas & Deepavali), the dense traffic between Malaysia and Singapore still leads to massive jams on both bridges.
